ARTICLES

Communities of Practices - Bringing stakeholders together towards a common goal

A community of practice (CoP) is a group of people who have an interest, passion, or concern in common and come together to learn more about it. In BioGov.net Communities of Practice are understood as regional co-creation labs bringing together the different stakeholder groups of the bioeconomy sector in a multi-stakeholder approach.

Discovering the Power of Bioeconomy: Inspiring Case Studies on Bioeconomy Education throughout the EU

In this article, we highlight case studies reshaping adult bioeconomy education, with a focus on innovative governance models. BioGov.net's initial work aimed to gather insights, identify success factors, and inspire future efforts. We explore the role of art in bioeconomy education, harnessing creativity for diverse educational needs, and prioritize social inclusion for vulnerable groups.
